CONQUEST OF BABYLON. we have not the means of following with any consecutiveness the career of Cyrus. He appears only in the light of history while acting in the great events that marked his life. Obscurity rests upon the intervals between the epoch of these transactions. Thus, from the fall of Sardis to the capture of Babylon, a period certainly of not less than eight or nine years elapsed. Of the events of this era, we only know, that, while the lieutenants of Cyrus were compelling the Greek cities of Lesser Asia to submit to the rule of their master, he himself was employed far to the eastward, in reducing the fierce barbarians occupying the plains stretching from the mountains bordering on India to the shores of the Caspian. Having effected this object, and established a frontier on the north-east, with military posts to keep at bay the tribes beyond the Oxus, it became a matter of policy and ambition to humble the only independent power of any consequence remaining in western Asia. This was the Babylonian, already largely environed by the Medo-Persian dominions, the subjugation of which was deemed essential to the unity of the empire, as well as to its safety and supremacy. Babylonia Proper comprised that tract of country inclosed between the Euphrates and the Tigris, with a portion of territory on the west bank of the former and the east bank of the latter. On the south,...
